Some irate residents are posting photographs to shame neighbours into good behaviour. This article is part of our Building on Heritage series on preserving heritage buildings and places while making them as sustainable as possible. However, the problems mentioned above can be seen when one has a close look at the high energetic consumption, the small dimension of the inhabited places, the lack of security against fire and the low level of hygrothermal comfort. The construction of the Belo Monte power plant started to materialize, inter And yet, a significant proportion of expected growth over the coming decades is expected to take place in such spaces. Kilamba as Phantasmagoria Kilamba might demonstrate that the government can fulfil its promises of modernity but, unfortunately, the vision of constructing one million houses in communities such as Kilamba began to vanish almost as soon as politicians and planners conceived it. We have suffered a lot with this so called development and haven't developed
