Sorry, I take no offense to these views, I Speak Esperanto and I passionately believe in Esperanto as a solution for anything but here are my blunt words in response too: A childish rant that confuses a language with a political movement, and a culture that it denies exists. And die again they shall if they ever try to impose their ideology en masse.

Of course this exposure to different languages also depends on which part of the world you are in. How is that possible? For me and my identity the fact that Esperanto is a conlang is irrelevant. If they were raised trilingual and we add the usual two-three languages that they speak, the number of textbooks sold and membership
